

Richard E. Wallace
Crowell & Moring LLP
Washington, DC

Rick Wallace is a partner with Crowell & Moring in Washington, DC. He defends mass tort and environmental cases nationwide. He is lead national counsel for several major oil companies in litigation over groundwater contamination from an additive known as MTBE, and has litigated hundreds of MTBE cases, including nine filed by State Attorneys General. Rick also regularly represents clients in other high-stakes tort and commercial cases across the country, and has done so throughout a career in private practice spanning more than 35 years. Chambers described him as “one of the intellectual gurus” in water contamination cases. Rick received his JD from Harvard in 1982. He is also a private pilot, hockey player, trout bum, and reckless skier.
