

Robert M. Craig III

Bob Craig, an active IADC member whose company BRG is a regular sponsor at IADC meetings, uses his more than 40 years of legal experience to advise clients in identifying and selecting consulting and testifying experts for litigation. His legal background includes time spent on active military duty, in private practice and in-house, having served as an Air Force JAG officer and US Air Force Academy professor, a law firm partner, and for nearly 30 years in-house for four major corporations, at each of which he held the position of chief litigation officer.

Mr. Craig's experience with complex litigation has put him in the middle of some of the most important cases affecting his industries. Further, his IADC activity combined with his role as a leader in the Litigation Section of the American Bar Association (ABA) have exposed him to a broad range of issues that face the business world. Specifically, he has an extensive background in all types of litigation matters, ranging from major securities cases and significant international arbitrations to industry-wide antitrust actions and critical intellectual property cases. He also has been retained personally as a court-designated independent in derivative litigation and is available for arbitration and mediation appointments.
