

David Duffy

David Duffy is a partner in Thompson Coburn LLP's Chicago office. He's a member of the Firm's Business Litigation, Privacy/Data Use and Security, and Product Liability practice groups. His practice focuses primarily on general commercial litigation, data security and product liability defense. David has been involved in technology-related litigation for more than fifteen years. His practice has involved the defense of a major ERP software developer in defense of its product-related claims as well as the prosecution of claims involving failed technology implementations and consulting engagements. More recently, David has defended data breach and privacy class actions, assisted with claims involving improper access to protected digital material, data storage vendor-related disputes, and the litigation of wire fraud claims resulting from cyber intrusions. David has been a speaker on the impact of technology on the legal profession, including management of cloud services in litigation. He's a past recipient of BTI's client service award for product liability is a member of DRI, the IADC, the Illinois State Bar Association and the International Association of Privacy Professionals.