

Charles Reynolds

Charles Reynolds is a partner with the Tampa based firm of Butler Weihmuller Katz Craig. His practice focuses on construction defect litigation, premises liability, and product liability. He also chairs the Casualty and Liability departments for the firm. He started his career as an Air Force JAG officer where he also served as an assistant U.S. Attorney prosecuting military related crimes for the Eastern District of Virginia. Following the Persian Gulf War he took a position as the Chief Legal Officer for Geonex Corporation, a defense contractor that made, among other components, the guidance system for Patriot Missile Systems. He is an active member of IADC and past chair of the Construction Law and Litigation Committee.